It seems hardly possible to an outsider, that those old faded, spotted Daguerrootypes and Ambrotypes, can be copied and finished in ink and made to look as wall as those taken from life, but nevertheless such is the fact, and Rice, at the New England Gallery, Warran, O., is the man who is doing this kind of work.

In addition to the above, he wishes it distinctly understood that he does not pretend to be a coloriet, but every picture of the above kind is copied by himself, and placed in the most skillful hands for finishing, and this will account for the decided superiority of his copied work over any other made in this section of the country. He has the facts to back this statement.
